

Dr Sebastian Rasinger

Principal Lecturer in Applied Linguistics

Urban multilingualism, migration and identity

My main research focus is on multilingual urban contexts: situations where different ethnic and linguistic groups live side by side in close proximity.

let alone cater for, the scale of the influx on housing, policing and public explosion would be fuelled by an influx of 13,500 migrants each year, spikes in crime and knife culture to an influx of Eastern Europeans were constituency from the impact of a influx of foreign workers and travellers. summit is set to be held to tackle the influx of immigrants in Cambridgeshire, Shadow Home Secretary, said the influx of immigrants from the most MPs and unions have welcomed the influx of immigrants to the region. A of Commerce, has welcomed the influx of migrant workers. He said: "The businesses have benefited from the influx of migrant workers who have filled

Media and minorities

Using methods derived from Critical Discourse Analysis and corpus-driven discourse methods, I look at how minorities – ethnic, social, sexual – are (re)presented in the mass media.

Research Methods: Theory – Pedagogy – Practice

I have a keen interest in research methodology, both quantitative and qualitative, and have written a textbook on quantitative methods, published in its 2nd edition by Bloomsbury Academic in late 2013. I'm also the Chair of the Faculty's Research Ethics Panel.

